Congratulations to the Volleyball All-City Honor Winners
The Indianapolis Star named Senior Cherish Lewis to the second All-City Team and Erica Hossler and Pia Marie Paulone to the Honorable Mention team. Congratulations to each of us on your excellent representation of ISD.

Loose Balls

By Carl Wayne Denney)

Often on chilly fall nights, I lay on my bed after a long day, letting my thoughts wander. More and more, my thoughts fall upon that magical autumn when I was a member of the 1982 Indiana School for the Deaf Orioles football team.

Although I was a young and growing sophomore that glorious October of golden falling leaves, I was the third string quarterback on a team that was very big, strong and determined. Being on the team was a mark of personal honor, being as it was that there were no freshmen and only one other sophomore on the team (following the age/grade limitations in the state).

Coached by Ernie Grubb, the team was numerous and each player was as tough and hardy as nails after a long summer pre-season camp of three-a-days wedged between constant drills and suicide sprints. Coach Grubb wandered amongst us, alternately threatening and encouraging.

One of my proudest moments, I kid you not, was of not throwing up my breakfast after the 15th or 18th or 20th 100-yard suicide sprint. Many others, many older were going through that, but not I. Although I do remember coming close to blacking out several times, the sweet taste of chilled water banished those thoughts of walking away from all those backbreaking practices.

What came from those halcyon days was something I never was part of before, and I fear, never will be part of again. We had a team of ferocious hitters who loved to leave me with a collection of new bruises after every practice that I had to face them on the scout team. I like to think the reason they demolished every deaf school opponent that season was because of my able imitation of opposing offenses, but lest flattery take me nowhere, they would have smashed them nonetheless.

Although fear was what the defense instilled upon us on the scout team, I once threw a long touchdown pass to a tight end clumsily running downfield before I was crushed under a ton of sweaty and smelly teenage flesh. After I struggled my way out of that mass, I immediately ran to slap hands with that tight end. After that, I was face to face with Anthony Metz, the meanest Oriole of them all. He said that was the last pass I would throw against them all season, and it turned out he was right.

Coach Grubb just lumbered over, grinning and said I had a golden arm and a bright future. Never before was there a sophomore on campus who felt a hundred feet tall as I did that chilly afternoon.

The offense was a thing of wonder. Depth was not a problem. On this squad were several running backs who could have run for a thousand yards with no sweat because of their own talent and of the immense line Coach Grubb had at his hands.

The quarterback was Mark Gessinger, the essential Golden Boy and four-year starter who had suffered through losing seasons. He was now facing his one opportunity for a national championship and doing it with grace and grit. He was also the one who took me under his wing, teaching me the proper footwork and passing stances. The 3-step, the 5-step and the 7-step were lessons he imparted unto me, as was the simple act of handing off the football. Always encouraging, with a sense of humor, he would allow me to bask in his presence even though he was the charismatic leader of the team and I was a mere scrub painfully learning his way around and oftentimes the whipping boy of constant never-malicious jokes and tricks.

Many names pop up from the year once removed from two decades. Rick Hancock was the dashing versatile athlete; the stately Andrew Metz was one young man who carried himself as a king and ran roughshod like one all over the field, and Lionel Jiminez, who would sooner bite your head off than offer you a kindly word.

There was Mike Stultz, who reminded me of a mystical predatory hawk the way he glided over the field and laid waste into an unsuspecting running back or receiver from his spot at safety. Larry Hurley and Larry Vaught were the running backs who had speed, talent and desire; and the afore-mentioned Anthony Metz, whose grim visage still inspires shivers to course through my body even this very day. Oh, there were many, many more.

We won the National Prep Championship that year. Our glorious moment as a team was defeating Park Tudor, our cross-town rivals, in our last game. Those starry Friday nights were the ones I loved, and with the years going by in a sandy blink, they become more and more something out of romantic lore. Something that I am not sure ever was.

But still, as autumn rolls around, the smell of leather and sweat wafts through the air and I once again dream of wearing an orange helmet and a black jersey, charging through a green grass field led by a commanding general who inspired hope and respect and love.

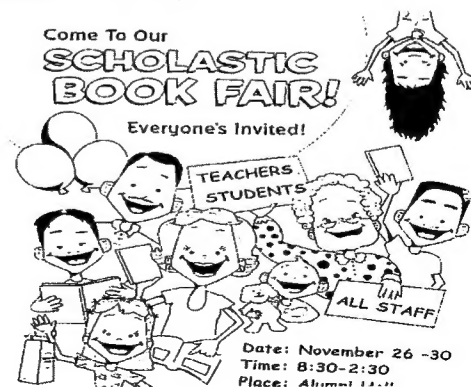

So here at night, so far away from the Elysian fields of lore, I dream and smile. I smile because I once was part of a hallowed team. I was once an Indiana School for the Deaf Oriole.

Making Source Reduction Work

Putting source reduction into practice is likely to require some change in our daily routines. Changing habits does not mean a return to a more difficult lifestyle, however. In fact, just the opposite may happen. If we don't reduce waste, the economic and social costs of waste disposal will continue to increase, and communities—large and small, urban and suburban—will face increasingly harder decisions about managing their trash.

All parts of society need to work together to change current patterns of waste generation and disposal. The federal government develops and provides information and looks for incentives to create less waste. It also helps communities plan and carry out source reduction measures. State, local, and tribal governments can create the most appropriate source reduction measures for their areas. For example, some communities already are using fee systems that require households and businesses to pay for trash disposal based on the amount they toss out.

Large consumers—manufacturers, retailers, restaurants, hotels, schools, and governments—can prevent waste in a variety of ways, including using products that create less trash. Manufacturers also can design products that use fewer hazardous components, require less packaging, are recyclable, use recycled materials, and result in less waste when they are no longer useful.

Individuals can evaluate their daily waste-producing activities to determine those that are essential (such as choosing medicines and foods packaged for safety and health), and those that are not (such as throwing away glass or plastic jars that could be reused or locally recycled). This web site suggests many practices that reduce waste or help manage it more effectively. Adopt those that are right for you and add others that you may think of yourself. Discuss your ideas with neighbors, businesses, and other members of your community. It's important to remember that all actions will have some effect on the environment. If reusable products need to be washed, for example, there may be an increase in water use.

Sports Update

HS Girls Basketball - It really felt good to be back on the sideline last night coaching the 2001-2002 Varsity Girls Basketball after being sidelined last season. Last night, we traveled to Lutheran to have our first practice scrimmage with only five days of practice. We went out with a big jump in the first quarter to start the game by taking a 12 to 0 lead. We continued to play well in the second and third quarters. We have some flaws that need to be ironed out, and we'll take care of them. In general, I am really pleased with our team's efforts last night. We dressed only 8 players. Four of our players were out with illness and/or injuries. Our bench will be a little stronger this year than we had last year. We will only have two seniors in Brooke Aldrete and Cherish Lewis, four juniors in Erica Hossler, Jorjan Jeter, Pia Marie Paulone, and Elsie Ritchie, three sophomores in Leesa McClelland, Dorothea Williams, and April Young plus three incoming freshmen in Ashley Bailey, Brittany Langford, and Valerie Watkins. We will have 7 days of practice before our opener against Northwest on November 13. They had an enrollment of over 1,000 students. Let's Go, Girls! Think and Beat Northwest! - Ken Kramer

November 7 at 8:15 – The Seventh Graders will have convocation in the Auditorium for all students and staff in the Third through Twelfth Grades.

Correction - A Research Project under the direction of Dr. Melissa R. Shyan with Butler University Psychology Department is being conducted with the involvement of I.S.D. Butler University Graduate Students, Amy Steiner and Autumn Kukla, are collecting the data. Linda Stevens and Anne Blackwell are two volunteers helping out. The Butler University team is researching a variety of ways to motivate multiply disabled students to learn. Thanks and sorry for any confusion.

Reducing Solid Waste

Each year, Americans generate millions of tons of trash in the form of wrappings, bottles, boxes, cans, grass clippings, furniture, clothing, phone books, and much, much, more.

Durable goods (tires, appliances, furniture) and nondurable goods (paper, certain disposable products, clothing) account for several million tons of the solid waste stream. Container and packaging waste is a significant component of the nation's waste stream as well. This material includes glass, aluminum, plastics, steel and other metals, and paper and paperboard. Yard trimmings such as grass clippings and tree limbs are also a substantial part of what we throw away. In addition, many relatively small components of the national solid waste stream add up to millions of tons. For example, one percent of the nation's waste stream can amount to about two million tons of trash each year.

Gallaudet Reading Workshop Update

Session 1 Full

Session 2 2 spots open

We are taking names for a waiting list. Contact Diane Jones for more information.

Help Needed – We are looking for volunteers to help with the Gallaudet Reading Workshop. We need one person for registration and 2 people to help with food set up. You will be needed from 8:00 a.m. – 12:00 p.m. on each day, November 10th and 11th. Contact Glenda Zmijewski or Diane Jones.

Nick Curtin's Twin Tower Picture T-Shirt Sale – We have received a shipment of T-shirts of the Twin Tower's hugging/crying picture that sophomore Nick Curtin created. His father owns a t-shirt company and has printed some to sell. We will take orders when these are gone. Currently, we have sizes in youth S (6-8), M (10-12), L (14-16) for $8.00, Adult S, M, L, XL for $10.00, and XXL for $12.00. You can place orders for XXXL $13.00, XXXXL for $16.00, and XXXXXL for $18.50. Sweatshirts will also be available through an order form at youth sizes for $13.00; adult sizes for $15.00, XXL for $18.00, XXXL for $20.00 and XXXXL for 23.50. See Pam Lewis, Building 6, Room 117, to buy or place an order for one. Orders will be sent to Curtin Imprint, Inc. weekly. Checks are to be made out to Indiana School for the Deaf – H account. All profits will be divided between the Red Cross Relief Fund, the Indiana School for the Deaf, and a scholarship fund for Nick's college education.

Telephone Scam – The Indiana Association of Chiefs of Police has notified the Indianapolis Police Department of a telephone scam that has been originating from jails and prisons. Ameritech has verified this information. The caller asks the person answering the call to participate in a telephone test by punching nine (9), zero (0), the pound sign (#), and then to hang up. Pushing 90# gives the caller access to the telephone line, which enables the caller to place long distance calls that will be billed to that telephone number. The scam works on business telephones where it is necessary to dial nine (9) to make outside telephone calls.

College Representatives – A college representative from Gallaudet University will be on campus on Thursday, November 1st at 9:00 a.m. – 10:00 a.m. N.T.I.D. will also be here on Friday, November 2nd, from 12:45 p.m. – 1:45 p.m. Both representatives will be presenting in the ASL Lab in the Vocational Building. For any senior or junior who wants to attend will need to sign up outside Jeff Richards' office today. For more information, please see Mr. Richards.
